Summit builds East County identity

by Steven Saint

They made no noisy proclamations nor launched a dozen new programs, but the participants in last Saturday's Community Prosperity Summit made a little more progress in the difficult work of building a sense of community in East County.

Around 100 people from government, education, private enterprise and social service agencies convened at Valhalla High School to help solidify the vision of a distinctly East County prosperity.

"Getting the diverse groups together may have been as important as the summit itself," said Lois Knowlton, the dean of Business and Professional Studies at Grossmont Community College who directed the conference planning. "If we combine our resources, we can help our economy better than if we get parochial and have one area fighting with another."

Knowlton pitched the college board on sponsoring the community partnership conference after attending a seminar offered by the California Community College Association. She and 23 others spent the past seven months arranging speakers and sponsors and getting the word out.

Although attendance gradually fell off as the day went on, Knowlton said she was pleased by the caliber of speakers and workshop leaders, which included Bill Ehlen of Valle de Oro Bank, Paul Schneider and Linda Ollis of Sharp HealthCare, El Cajon Police Chief Jack Smith, Supervisor Dianne Jacob and East County mayors Bob Burns (Lemon Grove), Jack Dale (Santee), Art Madrid (La Mesa) and Joan Shoemaker (El Cajon).

Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District Chancellor Dr. Jeanne Atherton gave the keynote address on the collective wisdom of geese. Scientists have determined that geese fly in a V-formation because each bird flapping its wings creates aerodynamic uplift for the birds immediately following, she said.

"By flying in a V formation, the whole flock adds at least 71 percent greater flying range than if each flew on its own," she said. "People who share a common direction and sense of community can get where they're going quicker and easier."

Knowlton said her office will produce a written report on the summit and hopes the cities, chambers of commerce and the East County Economic Development Council will collaborate on next year's summit - which people are already talking about.

"Whatever we're involved in already, we need to collaborate and support each other," she said. "We aren't going to improve our economy if people don't feel that East County, as a region, is their home."

Panel: Prop. 187 won't solve immigration woes

by Paul Treske

If there was a clear pattern emerging from last week's La Mesa forum on Proposition 187, it was the uneasiness of school officials regarding the children of undocumented aliens within their systems.

A panel consisting of Grossmont Union High School District Assistant Superintendent Carl Wong, La Mesa-Spring Valley School District Superintendent Warren Hogarth and Immigration and Naturalization Service Agent Darryl Griffen of the El Cajon Border Patrol station, zeroed in on the problems that public education is anticipating should Prop. 187 pass.

The forum was organized by the La Mesa Human Rights Commission. Moderator Barbara Collis of the League of Women Voters laid out the issue by noting that Prop. 187 would deny all health, welfare and educational services to undocumented residents and asked panelists to respond.

Wong, after detailing the mission of public education as providing future productive workers, developing informed and effective citizens, developing lifelong learners and instilling an ability to function in an increasingly diverse society, stated that the school system should be neutral on the issue of citizenship.

Adding that his opinions on 187 were his own and not the districts, Wong later observed that 187 suggests two levels of children, the deserving and undeserving. Warning that the teachers acting as police in the schools would "have a chilling effect on all students," Wong said that enforcing 187 sends the potential message of inequity.

Hogarth, also presenting a disclaimer of speaking only for himself, questioned the proposition's constitutionality, noting that in 1981, the Supreme Court reversed a similar law adopted in Texas. Even if passed, Hogarth predicted that 187 would be in the courts for a number of years.

Speaking to its effects on the school system Hogarth explained that, if passed, Prop 187 could result in a loss of up to $1.2 billion in federal money by California schools. Like Wong, he pointed to the offensiveness of putting teachers into a policing situation.

"It is not our job," he said, adding that a huge group of children with no education or jobs might well join the criminal ranks. "It is not a problem for education to solve. It is the job of Congress."

Griffen, queried as to whether he felt Prop. 187 would halt illegal immigration, expressed doubt.

"The political and economic climate in Latin countries needs improvement" he said, noting

Grossmont District seeks community vote on construction bond

by Lindy Magner

Among the measures to be presented specifically to East County voters Nov. 8 is Proposition O, the bond measure which the Grossmont Union High School District Governing Board hopes will fund new construction as well as renovation of the district's older schools.

If approved by a two-thirds majority, the measure would enable the school district to issue up to $75 million in general obligation bonds which would be funded through an assessment on property owners within the district's boundaries.

According to Carl Wong, assistant superintendent of instruction for the Grossmont Union High School District, the annual tax placed on the average homeowner would range from about $15 to $24, based on the property's assessed value. The assessment rate will be $15 per $100,000 of value.

In late June, the governing board approved the placement of the bond measure on the ballot.

According to Wong, if the measure fails to win approval in this election, voters will see it again on another general election ballot.

"We have no choice but to continue bringing it back to the voters," he said, noting that enrollment at the district's 10 schools is expected to increase by 6,000 to 8,000 in the next 10 years, an increase which will require that an additional school be built in about six years.

He said the predictions are based on the current populations within the elementary and middle school districts which feed into the high school district.

In recent weeks, Wong and other district staff members have been speaking before city council and community groups to explain the need for the bond issue.

At the Oct. 18 meeting of the Lemon Grove City Council, Dan Kitchen, the district director of curriculum, assessment and planning, stated that he was speaking before them because the bond issue "involves a lot of money and requires an explanation."

He said that seven of the 10 district schools are already at, on average, 6 percent over capacity, with a total of 20,600 students in the district.

He said that the overcrowding is keeping the district from technically complying with new state legislation designed to allow parents to choose the specific school for their children.

"Because of the overcrowding, transfers are not allowed into those seven schools," he said.

Kitchen said the governing board had considered various ways in which to reduce overcrowding without new construction, but concepts such as multi-track, year-round schools had been rejected.

"They never seem to work in high school districts," he said, noting that multi-track schedules divide the student population so that about 70 percent of a school's students are attending at the same time.

"This shrinks the number of students who are interested in specialty classes and vocation training, so courses end up getting chopped," he explained.

Kitchen, a resident of Lemon Grove, also detailed the deteriorating condition of most of the district's schools, seven of which are more than 30 years old.

"The problems at these facilities are beyond the cosmetic; major electric and plumbing systems need replacement and repair," he said.

He also explained that these older schools still have the same science lab and workshop facilities as the did when they were first constructed.

"The industries which we are now preparing students to work in have substantially changed from what they were 30 years ago," he said, adding that there is currently no state funding available to school districts for modernization of facilities.

League to hear water issues

To flush or not to flush - that is the question being addressed at the League of Women Voters November meetings, held at noon Tuesday in the El Cajon Library and 5:30 p.m. Thursday at the Souplantation, 9158 Fletcher Parkway in La Mesa.

Shirley Massie of Helix Water District and Harriet Stockwell with the State Water Quality Control Board will discuss where our water comes from, regional water storage and secondary sewage treatment.

The public is invited to attend.

Showcase Writers Club honors local writers

Sunday, Showcase Writers Club held its 28th annual award night, honoring the winners of its writing contest. The La Mesa-based club is replete with members from East County - new club president, Ruby Becker, secretary Eleanor Kent and treasurer Ed Myers are all from Spring Valley; its vice president, Mary Giacinto is a La Mesa resident.

Though in past years, the club has published an annual book of winning stories, poems and articles, this year the club couldn't afford that tradition. Giacinto said the club should be able to finance a book for next year's contest, and will include this year's winners as well.

If there was an all-round writing award, it would have gone to Ed Meyers, who placed in all four writing categories.

The winning works by category, are as follows:

Adult Short Story

 Second place - "Handsome Harold" by Pat Muir
 Third place - "Elastic Heart" by Penny Wilkes

Hearing set for fire department merger

At its Nov. 1 meeting, the Lemon Grove City Council will hold a public hearing to gather input on how residents feel about a proposed merger between the fire departments of Lemon Grove and La Mesa.

In mid-September, the councils of both cities met in La Mesa to hear a consultant's report on the feasibility of consolidating the two fire departments.

The consultant recommended that the two departments join, with Lemon Grove contracting with La Mesa for fire service in a way in which the smaller city would be involved in the budget of the consolidated department.

Though the La Mesa City Council was ready at that meeting to conceptually approve the merger, Lemon Grove was not. City Councilwoman Mary Sessom suggested that a public hearing be held to gather input from constituents and the Lemon Grove firefighters.

A recent survey conducted by the local firefighter's association shows that about 80 percent of the Lemon Grove firefighters favor the merger.

Following the public hearing, the council will give direction to City Manager Doug Yount on whether to proceed with the consolidation. If the green light is given, an implementation committee will be formed to work out the details of the contract.

The public hearing will be during the council's regular meeting, 7 p.m. at the Community Center, 3146 School Lane.

Halloween memories

Let's forget about politics this week. I've had enough of it for months to come - or at least till 1995. Let's talk about Halloween instead.

When I was young, Halloween was very different from what it is today. For one thing, it was strictly a children's event. In my neighborhood we knew nothing about trick or treat. We also knew nothing of store-bought costumes. Instead, we used to climb into completely homemade outfits - sheets for ghosts, grown-up cast-offs for other costumes - and run around the neighborhood creating minor havoc. It was an experience of all trick and no treat.

Our tricks were a bit vandalistic, but only the crabbiest of adults would really complain. We soaped designs and cuss words (far more innocent than today's) onto the windows of cars and houses. We tipped over trash cans or anything else movable and in general made a lot of noise.

My own favorite was to lovingly save a few cherry bombs from the Fourth of July and then light them under overturned trash cans. The noise was ear-splitting and it was fun to see how high off the ground the can would lift.

I knew nothing of trick or treat until age 12 when I was invited to a Halloween party in a swankier part of town. We were all handed bags and sent off into the neighborhood to knock on doors and receive what appeared to me to be a ton of goodies. Later we dunked for apples and played party games.

This was a total revelation to me as well as an early sociology lesson and my greedy little mind kept me from the usual mischief thereafter.

Halloween has metamorphosed into something quite different today. Above all, it is no longer exclusively a children's experience. Adults have taken over a good portion of the holiday with sophisticated parties and balls. Offices everywhere have adopted themselves to the concept. On Oct. 31, my bank teller is in costume, store clerks wear anything but their regular clothing and even more austere places like City Hall are liable to abound in ghosts, goblins and leggy chorus girls.

Of course, the kiddies are still sent out to trick or treat but even they seem rather perfunctory about it. Older kids go from door to door sans costumes seeking money instead of candy and if you were to ask a younger child to do a trick rather than receive a treat he/she would stare at you uncomprehendingly.

Other, even more unhappy factors have entered this once care-free and unstructured day. The "in" costumes of each year send parents scrambling to stores to "get one before they sell out." This year it's the "Mighty Morphin Power Ranger" outfits that have mothers and fathers cruising the city to find one so as not to break junior's heart - and spending many dollars in the process.

On the adult side, a certain degree of sickness has crept onto the scene as stores quickly sell out O.J. Simpson masks and striped prison outfits with dripping blood on them.

I suppose today's more politically and socially correct society would say that school carnivals, carefully supervised trick or treat and the like are a vast improvement over a free-form orgy of soaping cars and knocking over trash cans, but, in retrospect, I'm kind of glad I spent Halloween the way I did. It makes for a lot more treasured memories.

PG Perspectives by Phillip Giannangeli

An open letter to the government ignoramus(s) in charge of this month's semi-annual fiasco:

There are a lot of things you in government do that make people angry. You can raise taxes, cut benefits and mismanage all manner of important issues to get under our skins. You can talk us to death on matter after matter and belabor even the most insignificant point until nobody gives a darn anymore. But if you don't stop messing around with our most precious commodity of all, I predict a revolt of truly gigantic proportions.

So listen up government and try to get this through your fat head! Keep your hands off my hands - the ones attached to all the clocks in my life. I'm really getting sick and tired of your piddling, inept attempts to get something right by first lurching forward and then, about six months later, stumbling back to where you were in the first place. Can't you get it right for once and then just leave things alone?

I'm sure my grief is not anymore aggravated than that of others, but let me share some of the tribulations you put me through twice a year by those stupid time changes. First, I have a cat, (Happy is his name, H.A.P.P.Y., H.A. - sorry, wrong thought) who under normal circumstances is close to intolerable. Being a cat, he makes the extrapolation that these time changes are something that I sadistically impose on him in a willy-nilly manner. He's used to getting fed at a certain time of the day and then all of a sudden I become a laggard (off by about an hour according to his calculations) and about six months later, a time-disoriented nincompoop. Revenge creeps into his soul. It's not easy to gain your pet's trust and affection under those difficult circumstances.

My body's time clock is not much better than Happy's when it comes to time changes. I grow accustomed to certain activities at certain times and when those times bounce all over the place, my body goes into a rambunctious rebellion. Sleep, meals and other provinces of our species get all fouled up and I become a not-so-very-nice person. A long queue of the time-change aggrieved will attest to that.

As a teacher, I get to experience the effect the time change has on others of our race (the human one) too. I witness the joy of acquiescent youngsters (almost awake) adjusting to a different beginning time for class when one time-change torture is put in place. Then, when the next time change comes along, I get to see their gracious waiting-for-exit-at-the-end-of-a-school-day demeanor as they adjust to the new time warp imposed on them. Both experiences are the stuff of nostalgia in retirement communities where teachers go around slapping chalk erasers together.

There's so much more I could point out, but let me just say this: Listen you government knucklehead(s), quit messing around with my time. It's fine now; leave it that way. Keep your nose out of it. What would happen if the people at good old Greenwich mean started moving their clocks back and forth to satisfy some agricultural fanatics? You bet it would, and it wouldn't just hit the fan either!

There are many more important things government can do. Concerns that should capture its attention. Just the other day I heard a reporter say that the most dangerous place in Washington, D.C., our nation's capital, was between Phil Gramm and a TV camera. Now there's a problem government should do something about.

Gulf storm causes blood shortage

The San Diego Blood Bank is responding to an emergency appeal for blood from the Gulf Coast Regional Blood Center in Houston, Texas, in the wake of the serious storms and flooding occurring throughout southeast Texas. A total of 38 units of blood were just sent by the San Diego Blood Bank.

"Though more blood is needed in Texas, the supply in San Diego is declining rapidly, so we will only be able to provide additional help if San Diegans respond by donating blood as soon as possible," said Lynn Stedd, blood bank spokesperson.

John Drury of the Gulf Coast Regional Blood Center stated, "The flooding has made it necessary to cancel blood drives here because schools and businesses are all closed due to the weather. That means that the 500 pints we expected to receive today will not be available, and every day the storm continues our problems will be compounded. Unfortunately we have no idea when it will end."

Additionally Drury said it is almost impossible for anyone to drive to Gulf Coast area blood centers.

In San Diego blood supplies have been declining during the past few weeks due to poor response from donors recently. Healthy persons between 17 and 69 can help by calling 441-1804.

Lutheran celebrate Reformation Sunday and new organ

Members of Lemon Grove Lutheran Church have been eagerly anticipating Oct. 30 for weeks. That's Reformation Sunday; their new pipe organ will be dedicated during the morning service; and the dedicatory concert is scheduled for that afternoon at 4 p.m. in the church.

"A dream that we've had for a long time has finally materialized, and we keep pinching ourselves that the organ is truly ours," Pastor E. J. Volkmann said softly, with a sparkle in his eye, he continued, "We intend to expand our music ministry within our congregation as well as in the community."

"Our plans include bringing great artists here to give concerts for the community as well as encouraging young people to study the organ with a view to beginning to enlarge the pool of young organists."

The organ itself is a Rodgers Classic 835 Organ, a comprehensive two-manual instrument with 38 speaking stops and nine couplers, "enhanced with the addition of real organ pipes, the musical effect is absolutely stunning!" the pastor emphasized. An additional "goodie" is PDI technology used to go beyond the artificial sameness of digital sampling.

Howard McCullough, student of Dr. Russell Saunders of Drake University, and manager of Rodgers Classic Organ Studios of San Diego and artist-in-residence, will play the dedicatory concert. He will present selections by such composers as Bach, Clarambault, Bonnet, Gordon Young, Lemmens, Handel, Purcell, Schwann and others.

McCullough, a dynamic and entertaining organist who has appeared in concert at the local church several times, has performed classical and popular concerts world wide.

"The Rodgers 835," he says, "is capable - through MIDI - of traditional as well as contemporary styles of music. We can use it to honor the past as well as express the future. The listener is powerfully affected by the lushness of the music that this instrument is capable of producing."

He continued, "It is my intention to play music that demonstrates the colors of this organ as well as its scope and depth in this dedicatory recital. I hope everyone will rejoice in it, for the music will usher us into the presence of God to whom this instrument is dedicated."

Following this concert, a reception in Luther Hall will provide an opportunity to meet McCullough.

The public is invited.

Soroptimists seeking award candidates

The Soroptimist International of Lemon Grove is seeking candidates for its two foundation awards - Youth Citizenship Award and the Training Award, according to Pat Whitacre, club president.

These are annual cash grants awarded in the amounts of $300 and $600 respectively.

High school seniors are urged to apply for the Youth Citizenship Award, which was established to recognize outstanding contributions by young people to improve the quality of life of their fellow citizens in their schools, communities, countries and the world. Applications may be obtained at Mt. Miguel High School, Helix High School and Lemon Grove churches.

The Training Award Program was designed to assist a mature woman who is functioning as "head of household." It is intended to help the recipient in her efforts toward training and entry or re-entry into the labor market. Women who would like to apply can obtain an application at Grossmont and Cuyamaca Community Colleges, or through the offices of Lemon Grove churches.

Deadline for applying for either award is Dec. 15. Information or applications may be obtained by calling Christine Taub, 464-6934, foundation/chair for Soroptimist International of Lemon Grove.

In the Service

Marine Lance Cpl. Seve R. Monzon, son of Sergio and Mary Monzon of Lemon Grove, recently completed a six-month deployment to the Western Pacific and Indian oceans with 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit.

Monzon was one of 2,200 Marines and 2,000 Sailors in the four-ship USS Peleliu Amphibious Ready Group. During the deployment, Monzon served three months off the coast of Somalia and helped in the evacuation of U.S. citizens from Rwanda and Burundi.

The 1992 graduate of Mount Miguel High School, joined the Marine Corps in July 1992.

that he was speaking only as an individual. "Until then, the United States is too enticing."

Questioned as to differences between La Mesa and the Mountain Empire School District, where some children have been banned from attending school, Hogarth explained that the Mountain Empire situation was different.

"Many of those students lived in Mexico," he said, adding that although he believes illegals should be stopped, Prop. 187 "weighs down the schools with extra non-educational duties."

In his closing comments Griffen noted that Operation Gatekeeper has led to a 40-percent increase in California border personnel.

Although it is too early for evaluation, Griffen said that early indications are that illegal traffic is moving to the east.

Wong, calling education one of the pillars of democracy concluded that "public education function would not be served by passage of Prop. 187."

Hogarth was equally adamant. "Public education is not about law enforcement," he said. "Democracy is a function of well-educated citizens and public education is already overburdened by extra duties that eat away its major purpose."
